REVISED SEPTEMBER, 1971

A little over sixty years ago, a brick building began to rise on the south bank of the North Saskatchewan River, opposite Edmonton. This structure was the embodiment of a dream held by the Honourable A. C. Rutherford, the first Premier of the province, and Henry Marshall Tory, a mathematician from McGill who had been persuaded by Rutherford to come west as the University's first President.

The Faculty of Arts and Sciences, 45 students and five professors, had met for the first time in September, 1908, in classrooms borrowed from Strathcona School. When Athabasca Hall was ready in 1911, everyone moved in. Class rooms and dormitories, library and dining room and laboratories were hugger-mugger. Staff and students lived and studied together while bullfrogs croaked and cows grazed outside the windows.

Two more residence halls, Assiniboia and Pembina, were built before World War I, and in 1915 many new classrooms and offices were added with the completion of the Arts Building. The Faculties of Law, Medicine, and Applied Science (later called Engineering) were created before the war, followed by the Faculty of Agriculture and Schools of Pharmacy and Accountancy (now Business Administration and Commerce).

Although some growth continued throughout the twenties, the Depression years brought great stress to the university. The budget dwindled, and while numbers of students increased, the faculty and the physical campus grew not at all.

When World War II was over the University suddenly burgeoned, filling quansett huts and temporary structures to accommodate large numbers of ambitious exservicemen. The pace of permanent development quickened too. Rutherford Library, the first Students' Union Building (now University Hall), the Engineering Building, the Agriculture Building, and the Administration Building were all opened between 1950 and 1957.

The sixties were years of even more amazing growth: in enrolment, in facilities (over a dozen major buildings went up, including student residences on campus and at Michener Park), in the quality and number of academic staff, and in stature among other universities.

On the threshold of the seventies, the cattle and bullfrogs have given place to tall, modern buildings, some (such as the Students' Union Building and the Biological Sciences Centre) among the finest of their kind on the continent. Enrolment is well over 18,000, with over 2,000 students registered in graduate programs, and a campus serving 25,000 is envisaged. Many more buildings are in the course of construction and planning, and they will be linked by glass gallerias that will separate people and cold weather, and provide pedestrian concourses, lounges, and study areas.
